THE MERRY FIDDLER.

Sometimes if you listen—listen
When the sunlight fades to gray,] You will hear a strange musician, At the quiet close of day; Hear a strange and quaint musician On his shrill-voiced fiddle play,

He bears a curious fiddle On his coat of shiny black. And draws the bow across the string In crevice and in crack :

Till the sun climbs up the mountain And floods the earth with light, You will hear this strange musician Playing-playing all the night. Sometimes underneath the hearthston Sometimes underneath the floor,

He plays the same shrill music, Plays the same tune o'er and o'er ; Beneath a cold gray stone, He tightens up the sinews And fiddles all alone,

It may be in the autumn, From the corner of your room You will hear the shrill-voiced fiddle Sounding out upon the gloom; If you wish to see the player, Softly follow up the sound, And you'll find a dark-backed cricket wedding-day drew near. Tillie Kerr had been to visit the farmsilk dress, with its fan-shaped train and plumed Rubens hat, and white blonde scarf, wrapped like a fringe of sea-foam sround her neck, to criticise and find fault, and stare in a curious, listless way at the rooms which had been Janie's pride and care so long.

" This hall is so ridiculously narrow, said the bride-elect; "and the idea of such funny little winding stairs! Why, they make me think of a corkscrew !" John Marden looked at the staircase, down which he had been carried a baby. It had never struck him as incongruous

"And, of course," rattled on Miss Kerr, "you will have the partition between these two rooms taken down, and an archway put up ?"

"Of course," echoed Squire Marden But he didn't know why he said it. Janie was looking on, and there was a pained look in her face. She was thinking of how poor Mary's corpse, crowned with white flowers, had lain there so "Ah," said Squire Marden, "it's a short a time ago-how the dear old heavy responsibility to put upon one mother, whose memory John still so tenderly revered, died in the sunny back-room, just when the March snow-"I hope I do everything to please drops were bursting through the frozen
